In June, a 9-year-old Columbus boy was shot in the back while watching a fight between teen-age boys in his neighborhood. Anthony Keyes will never talk again.

He and his family now face a lifetime of pain, hardship and expense.

The Columbus Association of Black Journalists asks for support in a fundraiser to benefit Anthony Keyes. Join us Saturday, Sept. 16, at East High School for CABJ's Keyes benefit yard sale. That's from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. in the East side parking lot.

Take this opportunity to meet your local Black journalists, to take home some bargains and to help a child who is fighting back against senseless street violence.

The Columbus Metropolitan Area Community Action Organization (CMACAO) Board of Trustees recently passed a resolution that appointed Alice Hairston, President, Franklin County Council of Elders (FCCE's) and past CMACAO board member to the Ohio State Legal Services Association Board of Trustees (OSLSAB). Hairston is active in many organizations and groups on the local, state and national levels. Her primary concern is adequate services for the elderly, including legal services.

CMACAO's Board selected Hairston for the OSLSAB because her leadership has been exemplary and her commitment unmatched during her association with CMACAO. The FCCEs is the senior citizen advisory group to the CMACAO Human Services Department's Senior Opportunities and Services (SOS) Program.

Unmasking discrimination's new face

By JACK MARCHBANKS

Bashing African-Americans who are making career gains has long been the favorite bloodsport of the Columbus power club's more insecure and mean-spirited members. It doesn't matter whether the Black professional is a well-known politician or a little-known business person. At the convenient moment, a power club member will literally hand a "story" to the majority press' hungriest cheap shot artist (these cheap shot artists invariably glorify themselves to be "investigative reports"). The power clubbers then sit back and share a chuckle while the latest Black with a big idea or an "undeserved" position is mangled by the local media hounds. Wearily accustomed to such grisly attacks, Columbus' Black community averts its eyes and hurries by like hardened New Yorkers sidestepping a mugging-in-progress. The usual epilogue goes like this: the victim crawls away and hopes for a year or two of career-healing anonymity.

Columbus has been my home since 1977 and I have watched the disgusting spectacle of its power club entertaining itself and confirming its worst suspicions about

Blacks' competence more times than I care to remember. Recently, it was my turn to be the "entertainment." Since I am a striver who is proud of his African-American heritage, I cannot say that I was surprised by The Columbus Dispatch's disparaging accounts of my "administrative shortcomings" as director of a

Franklin Village employee not happy with closings

By PAT HENDRICKS
Call and Post Staff Writer

A Franklin Village employee sent an unsigned letter to the Call and Post to complain about cottage closings and other changes being made under Franklin County Children Services executive director Margaret Sandberg.

The employee stated that the situation at the Village, a residential home for troubled boys, has become intolerable. He said the Village has gone through drastic changes since the arrival of Sandberg.

He wrote that the Village was thriving with life and served countless numbers of neglected and abused children before Sandberg came on board. Out of the seven cottages that were open last year, four have been closed.

"Now we only have three open. Mrs. Sandberg just closed cottage number six without telling the staff in advance," the employee stated. "The staff and youth found out through personnel instead of the boss...The youth were really upset about what happened."

He went on to say that he feels the executive director is discriminating against the youth leaders, the majority of whom are Black. The employee complained of shifts changes for workers who had been on certain shifts for years; employees quitting due to cottage closings and staff not knowing what's going on.

Sandberg said the staff was notified in advancing of closings and that the cottages were closed because "the whole child welfare system is going through a major change." She said the tide is to not

The AIDS risks for Black women

By PAMELA D. CARTER

Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome, (AIDS), has increased dramatically since 1981, effecting all segments of society. Although research continues, there is no cure for the virus. Education is the only effective tool for fighting this disease.

There are increasing numbers of Black women who have slept unknowingly with bisexual partners and received the virus. Women make up 7 percent of all AIDS cases, and 52 percent of them are Black.

Medical experts have estimated that the number of Black gay and bisexual men in America to be about 10 percent of the Black male population.

The main issue is not homosexuality but the increasing numbers of Black women who believe they

Columbus in need of reform in race relations

By PAT HENDRICKS
Call and Post Staff Writer

To those to think the problem of racism went out in the '60s and '70s the following may cause a serious conscious awakening. Day after day the Call and Post receives calls from Blacks in the community who are experiencing some form of discrimination whether it be in housing, school, the workplace or wherever. It is happening today and we are about to enter the 1990s.

Recently reported in this publication was a case of a Black employee at The Dispatch who was turned down twice for a job he was more than qualified for. When he inquired about the position he was told two white men had been given the jobs.

Another recent article focused on the plight of Black car salesmen in Columbus. There are too few given the amount of money Blacks spend buying new and used cars.

A University of Chicago study pointed out that Blacks are being

"hypersegregated" because of multiple forms of residential segregation. A Black family here in Columbus has had their home vandalized twice since they moved into a predominately white area.

Dr. Horace E. Newsum, associate professor, Department of Black Studies Ohio State University was recently quoted in Columbus Alive "Columbus doesn't see the overt racism still found throughout the South. The racism in this town is largely institutional. There are new games here. It is couched in language such as 'This person didn't meet our current need.'"

That statement is often heard when it comes to the hiring of Blacks. Dr. Ronald Etheridge, Columbus Public Schools Superintendent has been under fire lately for not being able to find qualified Black persons to fill at least one of the top two administrative positions on his staff.

Penny Fanroy, a mother of four, just last week went to the Ohio Civil Rights Commission and the local NAACP for advice in dealing with her employer, the Galbreath Security Company. She said she was transferred from her front desk receptionist job at Bank One downtown to a uniformed roving guard job in the back of the State Office Tower, all under questionable circumstances. Kensley Nyce at the security company said it was done for Fanroy's own good. He was doing her a favor when I could have fired

EDITORIAL

Drugs - a curse on our people!

Editor's Note: The seriousness and urgency of the drug problem prompts us to publish on the front page the publisher's statement on this serious problem.

The Bible often speaks of plagues causing deaths and devastation upon the land. Today, in my view, we have a curse upon our people and a plague upon this land.

By the turn of this century, unless we are able to drastically reduce the use of cocaine, crack, heroin and the rest of these bullets of death, the plague will have struck one out of every 10 Americans.

President Bush has come forward, declaring a war on drugs. The President has asserted his leadership and laid out his strategy. It is the first time that the war on drugs has had a battle plan and a full time general—Dr. William Bennett.

The President's plan is being criticized because it does not provide enough money. Of course, any plan is going to be criticized. Politicians say it is too little, while the taxpayers believe that they should not pay to cure those who use drugs.

This curse upon our land, if it is to be won, will not be won with hydrogen bombs, a powerful navy or big army. This war will require every American to go to the war front. Unfortunately, this war front is not in a distant land. It is in our own country.

The instruments of death are in our own neighborhoods. This will have to be an unconventional war and we must consider guerilla warfare as a tactic.

There are no clear rules of the game. The drug dealers employing youths as lookouts, sellers and messengers, the user driving up into our neighborhoods buying without impunity, are the ones that we must declare war upon.

Interdiction before the drugs enter this country is necessary. However, in my view this is not the way this war will be won. Each one of us must become a warrior. We must turn towards the user and not treat them as lepers. We must help, counsel, join as volunteers and spend our money in this struggle. This commitment calls upon every moral fiber and muscle in our body to fight this plague.

Once each of us is convinced of our responsibility, to not only seek help for the user, but to provide the help, then the police and the law enforcement people can handle the dealers and petty thieves that are on our streets and in the dope houses—stealing our health and our freedom.

certain government agency. There is a twist to the epilogue, however. I am fighting back.

To other African-American professionals under fire in their jobs, I say: Document your mistreatment. You have less to lose and more to gain by fighting back than you think. We must brave the pain of embarrassment and come forward with the ugly details of the stealthy injuries dealt to us in the work place. Why? Because discrimination as we enter the 1990's is insidiously subtle. No one is going to call you the "N" word to your face or turn a fire hose on you. Discriminatory acts are just not that blatant anymore. And, we who have seen the new face of discrimination have the duty to describe it to a general public that is still looking for Bull Connor. We have the forum here in Columbus through a strong Black press. So there is no excuse for silence. We must answer the bashers and unmask discrimination's new face.

KEY FACTS OMITTED IN

CHILD SUPPORT ARTICLES

The Sept. 1 editorial on child support was in error. The public deserves more than an explanation of the critical charges leveled against the Franklin County Child Support Enforcement Agency for the past two months. The public deserves the truth, free of omissions and distortions. Not that a change of employment has freed me from the gag order imposed on me by county officials, I can provide some curiously omitted facts.

First, the state review that cited Franklin County Child Support as having 53,277 delinquent cases covered a two-year period ending September 30, 1987. I did not officially start work as child support director until January, 1988. Further, any informed Ohio Bureau of Child Support official will tell you that the 53,277 delinquent case total is a greatly overstated estimate. Franklin County carried then and still carries now unknown thousands of long inactive cases on its books, all of which are counted as delinquent by the state. One of my frustrated initiatives was to close these deadwood cases. Dispatch writers seem to forget that Franklin County had been doing a poor job at enforcing child support for ten years prior to my appointment. Also overlooked is the fact that when the predecessor child support units came together in January, 1988, they brought a massive backlog of unworked cases with them. I contend that no one could turn things around in a year. And, a year was all I had since any real administrative authority was stripped from me in December, 1988.

Secondly, the infamous 7,301 overtime hours worked by child support staffers were expended for the specific purpose of automating the county's child support payment collection system and converting the county's archaic paper file system to a computerized one. A reasoned decision was made to prepare for automation on an overtime basis instead of going out to bid for a data consultant. Franklin County, as a result, now has only the fourth fully automated payment collections system in the state, joining Hamilton County, Lucas County and Cuyahoga County.

In addition, Franklin County's case file system is now primed for the Ohio Department of Human Services' upcoming automated Statewide Enforcement Tracking System (SETS). This work would have cost at least $250,000 if it had been done by outside consultants. The overtime tab was about $185,000. This project was not the wanton misuse of overtime as portrayed in this newspaper.

If child support enforcement is to improve, we must invest in long-term solutions such as computerization. There are no quick fixes to a mess that has been over ten years in the making.

Wylie supports eastside redevelopment project

By PAMELA D. CARTER
Call and Post Staff Writer

U.S. Rep. Chalmers P. Wylie attended a press conference recently to show support for the efforts put forth by Main Street Business Association. The near East Side may receive a larger post office in a planned redevelopment project in the area of E. Main St. and E. 17th St.

Walter R. Cates Sr., president of the East Main Street Association has a plan that would place the post office in a 3.2-acre, redevelopment project bounded by E. Main St. 18th, E. Mound and S. 17th streets.

"This is a golden opportunity to restore pride in the Black and white communities," Wylie said. "It will also bring small industries into the area and provide employment."

Ray Jacobs, communications manager for the U.S. Postal Service, said by moving the postal service in the E. Main street site, would make things more convenient for the carriers. However, the site has not been formally selected but is the preferred area for a substation that would consolidate several smaller operations.

According to Jacobs, the plans would consolidate Station E, at 1035 McAllister Ave., the Mt. Vernon substation at 327 N. 20th St. and possibly Station F at 500 E. Whittier St.

The planned post office would be twice as large as any of those stations, Jacobs said.

The Postal Service has money in its budget and plans to get land for a post office in the fiscal year that begins Sept. 23. Space needs and costs and solicit bids must be studied before selecting a location.

Cates would like to attract small business such as a dry cleaner or bakery shop to the redevelopment project. The only public money is a tentative $150,000 grant from the Ohio Department of Development's Minority Development Financing Commission.

"We have had businesses ask about the site but have since relocated because we couldn't promise a deadline date," Cates said. "It's taken about five years for us to get to this point. I project a year to 18 months to gather the funding needed."

"I think this area can be restored as any other part of the city," City Councilman M.D. Robinson said. "It doesn't make sense to have Capitol South downtown and such a blighted area just two blocks away. Main street is a vital artery in the city. This project is going to have to be done in stages."

Cates has requested the a $30,000 operating grant to help small minority businesses get started. He has also applied for a $245,000 low-interest economic development loan for the overall project.

"All we want is the same help that was given to the City Center, the Convention Center and Ameriflora," Cates said.

I was glad to see the couple of articles written concerning the Child Support Enforcement Agency. As an employee of that agency, I feel that there is much more that needs to be said. For Residential segregation: Good or bad for growing Black child?

By PAT HENDRICKS
Call and Post Staff Writer

The University of Chicago recently published a report showing that Blacks in ten of the nation's major metropolitan areas are "hypersegregated" because of multiple forms of residential segregation.

The authors of the report published in the Aug. 4 edition of the journal Demography said, "It has been known for some time that Blacks are unevenly distributed in many metropolitan areas, meaning that most tracts where Blacks live contain a disproportionate number of Black residents."

Douglas Massey, professor of Sociology and Director of the Population Research Center at the University of Chicago and Nancy Denton, a research associate at NORC, an independent social science research agency at the university, studied five ways in which people may be segregated.

They concluded that "a high level of segregation on any one of these dimensions is troublesome because it isolates minorities from amenities, opportunities and resources that affect social and economic well-being."

Columbus psychologist Dr. Vernard Roberts agrees that residential segregation is troublesome and especially for Black children.

"It has a major effect on Black children because most of the time when they are living in segregated areas the area is substandard or project type areas," Roberts said.

"Parents restrict their children's play and they can't do things more affluent children do," he continued. "Black children in these areas come into contact with more negative peers and usually they're harassed by order more aggressive youngsters and this impacts on their own concept of self-worth."

Some may argue that it's good for children to be surrounded by their own race and culture. However, Roberts believes Black children are being shortchanged when they aren't exposed to a multicultural environment and experiences. When they see other children with different lifestyles, they feel different and left out, Roberts said.

Smaller children have a much more difficult time dealing with their situation. They are predisposed to a lot of negative situations little children shouldn't be exposed to. Many times they are in that situation because of their parents lack of cultural and educational experiences," he said. The whole thing seems to breed an unhealthy atmosphere for children to grow and prosper they way they could if living in a more affluent neighborhood."

Roberts said one solution for helping children in these areas is for parents to begin meeting their children's basic needs of love, affection, attention and concern. He said many times parents get so depressed about their own plight they forget about the children.

"The Black child will have a better chance of surviving and getting out of this situation if parents communicate with their children on a daily basis, get them into reading at the earliest age possible because sometimes reading is a way out," Roberts said.

"Exposed them to anything enriching, keep them involved and take an active part in school. Sometimes people feel because of their situation they shouldn't have an active role in school. Get the children involved in community and recreation center programs—anything of a healthy nature to enhance their sense of self-worth and achievement."

Regardless of the situation, Roberts feel it's up to parents and individuals to provide positive role models and be more selective regarding activities their children get involved in.

Massey and Denton concluded in their report that "Two decades after the 1968 Civil Rights Act, Blacks still have not achieved the freedom to live where they want."

Blacks provide leadership for UW campaign

Four prominent Black executives are providing leadership for the 1989 "Hope Is Where The Heart Is" United Way Campaign, that kicks off Sept. 8.

Lewis R. Smoot Sr., president of The Sherman R. Smoot Company, Inc. is serving as an honorary chair of the campaign. David E. Johnson, central region director for the Ohio Civil Service Employees Association/AFCME, 11, is serving as the associate general chair of labor.

Johnson said, "In this job, there are challenges to confront nearly every day. I'm ready and anxious to take on the challenge of helping the United Way to reach its $30,750,000 goal. They will join Gerry Mayo, chief executive officer of the Midland Mutual Life Insurance Company, who is serving as the campaign chair.

Johnson explained that he is particularly committed to the United Way campaign because of the programs and services offered to the community by the 69 agencies that are affiliated with, and receive funding from the United Way.

"The United Way agencies are especially important to labor because in many cases all it would take is a few bad breaks for a person to find himself or herself at the door of a United Way Agency," Johnson added.

There are many United Way agencies and programs which are located within the Black community. Some of these include St. Stephens Community House, the Columbus Urban League and the South Side Learning and Development Center.

There are also many community centers funded by the United Way. They include Catholic Social Services, St. Aloysius Center; Hilltop Civic Council; The Salvation Army, Central Community House; Neighborhood House; Central Community House South; and Southwest Community Center.

In addition to Johnson and Smoot, Robert M. Duncan, partner in Jones, Day, Reavis & Pogue is this year's Sponsorship

Chair, and Curtis J. Moody, AIA, president of Moody-Nolan Ltd., is the Business Development Chair.

The campaign cabinet's primary function is to develop and implement strategies to reach or surpass the $30.7 million minimum needs goal.

Cabinet volunteers represent all segments of the community and are responsible for planning, recruiting volunteer teams, structuring assigned accounts and communicating the United Way message to all sectors of the community.

All of these functions are performed in addition to the individual volunteer's full-time position and other daily commitments.

J. Pat Ross, chairman of the United Way Board of Trustees, said, "We are tremendously grateful for the time and efforts of our volunteer cabinet members. The amount of thought and energy that this group of community leaders devotes to the campaign demonstrates the concern and commitment that they all have for Franklin County and the United Way."

London holds No Crime Day

London, England, held a "No Crime Day" on Sunday, Sept. 10, to mark the anniversary of the 1966 assassination of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. The day was observed with a variety of activities, including a candlelight vigil, a march, and a concert. The event was organized by the London Community Council and the London Anti-Racism Committee.

The "No Crime Day" was a day of reflection and action. It was a day when Londoners came together to remember the impact of Dr. King's death and to commit themselves to a more just and peaceful world. Oppression causes domestic violence

By PAMELA D. CANTER
Call and Post Staff Writer

Centuries of oppression and racism are the causes of domestic violence in the Black community, according to authors, Evelyn White and Eleanor Johnson. The feelings of isolation, shame, fear, guilt and low esteem are intensified in Black women who are battered.

Based on statistics by the Franklin County Mental Health Board, from January-December, 1988, 214 females were victims of domestic violence. Black female victims represented 30 percent or approximately 58 of the total mount.

There are many different types of abuses. They are, physical, sexual and psychological. Abuse by men is not caused by specific incidents, but is a result of a power/control issue. It is also one of the major causes of injury to women exceeding rapes, muggings, and auto accidents. In many instances, the abuser is used to establish dominance and continues threats of violence is used to maintain it.

The self-esteem of a battered woman who is Black is subject to jeopardy. Her sex, race and abuse she suffers will continue to reinforce her negative self-concept. Education and support will help separate out what is being done to her versus what she is responsible for and who she is.

Some of the ways to identify a battered woman is to ask her the following questions:

- Is her self-esteem low?
- Does she give vague or incomplete information?
- Is she isolated from family and friends?
- Does she feel depressed?
- Did her partner grow up in an abusive family?

There are many myths about domestic violence and why it occurs. Some of these myths are as follows: Beatings occur when a man is stressed; some women deserve to be beaten; women who remain in abusive relationships are masochistic and women need to be slapped around.

The realities to these myths are: everyone is stressed. Positive self management is a healthy alternative to using violence; No person deserves to be abused; women remain in abusive relationships for cultural, religious, and social reasons; No one needs to be slapped around to learn anything.

Domestic violence shelters have started to break down the isolation experienced by battered women simply by offering more places for them to seek help. All service providers and agencies are educating themselves about the cultural differences in order to respond more sensitively to Black battered women.

The bottom line is that no one deserves to be abused.

IN OUR OPINION

Not as safe as South Africa

Black bathers and college students at Virginia Beach, USA, probably thought that they were on the beaches in South Africa.

From our news sources and pictures, it would appear that the police at the beaches in South Africa were not as brutal as the helmeted, stick swingers wearing badges at Virginia Beach.

The South Africans were at their beaches protesting the unlawful and inhumane apartheid ban on Blacks using the beaches. In contrast, Blacks at Virginia Beach were exercising their lawful right to use the beach. It all seems so silly to us to have white beaches and Black beaches. The same Atlantic waters flow from the Black beach to the white beach and back and forth with the waves. Fortunately, the same salt rubs on Blacks bodies and white bodies and we don't think the water cares much who it bathes.

Somehow, those of us on this planet must learn to live together and remove the artificial barriers of race and racism.

SBA fails to loan to Blacks

It is virtually a crime that the Small Business Administration, which was established to help small and minority businesses get started and grow has abdicated its function.

We reviewed with total disgust the Chapter 11 bankruptcy filing by River Capital Corp., a venture capital company which has received over $28.5 million in advances from the Small Business Administration.

River Capital Corp. was supposed to make loans to other companies and assist the SBA in providing capital to these companies. We were unable to identify a single Black company that River Capital Corp. has loaned money to.

This again, points out the fact that white companies file bankruptcy, owe the government millions of dollars and nobody does anything about it. A Black company, on the other hand, which is loaned 2 or 3 hundred thousand dollars, fails to repay or is late paying because of lack of sufficient capital in the first place, ends up with the white media blasting the situation, the government suing everybody it can find, the IRS taking the person's house and all of the other evil things that can be done to the Black entrepreneur who makes an effort.

This is not right. This is not the American way.

We shall continue our efforts to bring about some sensible consideration of the plight of the Black entrepreneur and also the Black business person who has been in business and needs working capital and needs assistance, but is shut out by the system, both government and private.

Bush's drug war

President Bush, declaring that illicit drug use is the "gravest domestic threat facing our nation today," has proposed to institute a new war on drug abuse. We applaud the idea, yet we question the level of commitment to the enterprise, and its focus on the easy issues of law enforcement and not on the tougher questions of reduction of demand in the United States and drug cultivation in other countries.

First, Bush has proposed an increase of $2.2 billion in the nation's drug enforcement and treatment programs. Yet this increase is comprised almost entirely of law enforcement funds domestically and foreign military aid. There has been only a minimal increase in funds for treatment.

Even the $2.2 billion increase represents a paltry sum when one considers the billions of dollars being spent to expand a peacetime defense industry. The $2.2 billion increase could be funded by just four of the expected 130 new stealth bombers which will be built over the next few years, yet there is belief that the administration may take the funds for its programs from other human services programs--thus leaving them poorer to address the root causes of the problem.

The administration has proposed tougher penalties for drug dealers, and has provided federal funds to enhance the judicial systems in states and localities. However, the exponential growth in drug arrests and convictions will outstrip the additional funds available for state and local governments--indeed, it already has.

The Bush program would provide millions of dollars on foreign military aid to help governments in the front-line drug nations--Peru, Colombia and Bolivia, primarily--upgrade their military forces to deal with the drug threat. Yet there is no economic aid attached which would allow these countries to begin to train farmers in other crops for export, in order to wean them off the highly-profitable coca plants.

Indeed, the fundamental causes of the drug problem in our inner cities and these foreign countries--the poverty, despair and hopelessness which makes the purveying of drug death the only means of a good life--remains unaddressed by the Bush proposal. It is in this poverty and despair that inner-city crack dealers and users and small-time Colombia and Peruvian farmers have a common bond, and therefore must be reached by a common message--not just a message of punishment for doing wrong, but hope for a better life by doing something right.

We are pleased that President Bush realizes the scourge that drugs is playing on this country--particularly in our nation's inner cities. Yet, we are concerned that his efforts are insufficient and improperly directed to address the real problems.

We hope Congress will thoroughly review the plan, and assist the president in coming up with a program which seriously expands treatment alternatives here in the United States even as it looks for alternatives to the drug culture, both in the United States and in the drug-supplying nations abroad.

Police probe needed

The August 13 beating of two Black men at St. Anthony-Mercy Hospital seems to recall the "bad old days" of the Columbus Division of Police, when Blacks were often subjected to brutal beatings by police officers who were perpetually angry at the Black community.

We are urging Safety Director Alphonso Montgomery to investigate this incident to determine whether appropriate police measures were used, and effectively discipline the officers if he determines they were not.

In the incident, Reginald Simpkins and Michael Brown were already handcuffed when Simpkins spat at one of the officers. According to several witnesses, who are personnel of St. Anthony-Mercy Hospital, the police officers held Simpkins down while the officer who Simpkins spat at hit him over and over again in the face and mouth, and sprayed mace in his mouth.

It goes without saying that Simpkins was wrong in spitting at the police officer. However, it also goes without saying that a police officer should demonstrate more restraint than the person he is arresting--particularly when the person he is arresting has his hands cuffed behind his back and is unable to defend himself.

Police brutality was once a major problem in Columbus, which was only mitigated when police and city officials decided that it was not in the best interests of the city at large to have a hoard of cowboys guarding the city's streets.

Since that time in the mid-1970s, the incidence of police brutality has decreased. But this incident, combined with recent continuing allegations of discrimination against Black police officers and the absence of Blacks from the police division's most recent recruitment class, point toward problems in the future with race relations which can begin to spill out to the Black community at large--just as they did in the past.

COMMENTARY

War in Cleveland

Years like 1989 are supposed to be off-years in politics. The major races, whether presidential or statewide offices, occur in the even-numbered years, and all the politicians are looking to 1990 for the musical chairs which will occur when all the potential candidates figure out whether their names will be in the running for the vacancies which should arise when the current statewide officeholders go for the governor's seat.

But 1989 looks like it will be an interesting year regardless. Not because of what's happening in Columbus; Black city council member Ben Espy, and his fellow incumbents, are snoozing to an easy victory. Not even because of what's happening in Cincinnati, although two Black incumbents--Paul Booth and Reggie Williams--are seeking election to their first full terms as city council members, and are being challenged by William Mallory Jr., son of the Black state representative.

No, the real battle--the real WAR--is in Cleveland, where the question is whether Cleveland city council president George Forbes will sing a victory march or a swan song on election day.

Forbes, with a massive war chest and the support of the city's business community, is locked in a struggle with several other candidates, including Cuyahoga County Commissioner Tim Hagan, city clerk of courts Benny Bonanno and Ralph Perk Jr., son of the former Cleveland mayor. The nature of Cleveland politics, with its intense east-west, Black-white divisions and the polarized environment which exists around the persona of the often-strident Forbes, makes it

Forbes has not responded to White's attacks, and has said that he would support White if he won the primary. Obviously, Forbes is confident this will not occur, particularly since, despite White's attacks, he has been unable to likely that there will be a war with these white opponents.

However, what might be most interesting is the war going on within the Black community, as State Sen. Michael White--once a close ally of Forbes--has been leading the attacks on his former mentor.

Recently, White even brought U.S. Congressman Louis Stokes into the act, attacking Stokes for allowing Forbes to address his 21st District Caucus meeting.

White has attacked Forbes for questionable ethics and questioned his concern for the city's poor residents. Indeed, probably the sharpest attacks in a sharp campaign have come from White. White has even said that he probably could not support Forbes if he won the primary.

generate the kind of strong support which could propel him into the final election in November.

Forbes may perceive White's attacks as minimal--rifle shots in a battle where only howitzers can make a dent. However, one might wonder whether those rifle shots, coming with rapid fire, will be able to chip away some of the Forbes armor in the Black community, and thus make him more vulnerable to cannon fire from the west side of the Cuyahoga River.

Cleveland has not had a Black mayor since Carl Stokes resigned in 1971. With Blacks and whites now almost equal in voter registration, 1989 looks like a possibility. But the results of the battle between the Black politicians in the Black community will probably determine who wins the war for supremacy in Cleveland.

Looking at plausible implausibles

Many plausible statements are false. But worse than that, they often form the basis for political demagoguery and intervention. Let's explore some.

Newsmen, Naderites, and other false consumer advocates often accuse businesses of greedy profit grabbing through "planned obsolescence." At first blush, this sounds plausible. After all, manufacturing a television set that lasts a shorter time allows businessmen to sell more and reap more profits. Let's look at this argument through a simple example.

You're a television manufacturer and can make a set which lasts for one year and costs you $90. The consumer is willing to pay $100 for a year's worth of television services, giving you a profit of $10. Suppose by spending an additional $15 you could produce a set that lasts two years, what would our consumer be willing to pay for it? Since he paid $100 for a television with a one year life, he's be willing to pay $200 for one that lasts two years (actually a little less because of a concept economists call "present value").

So there you are faced with the choice between making a set that costs $90 and sells for $100, or making a set that costs you $105 and sells for $190. I bet you'd take the $85 profits over the $10. You benefit from producing a set with a longer life and the consumers benefit because of lowered shopping costs. In part, this explains why consumers are willing to pay higher prices for Volkswagens, Volvos, Mercedes, and other cars with longer expected lives, and why these cars have higher resale values.

Some goods may be produced with shorter lives because of higher labor costs making it cheaper to replace than to repair. Electronic goods, footwear, and many others fall into this category.

"Smart" newsmen, Naderites, and congressmen preach that, through billions of advertising dollars, big corporations make us buy whatever they produce? Har-us want a "new" Coke. The new drink fizzled right in their cases. Coca-Cola did an immediate about face and had the old-fashioned Classic Coke back on market shelves within weeks.

Another of America's large corporations, IBM, spent millions upon millions to "make" us buy the PCjr computer. Again, a massive flop and IBM had to eat its mistake. Those of us up in years will remember Ford Motor Company's Edsel, advertised as "the car of the future." I believe Edsel vard Professor Kenneth Galbraith popularized this notion under the name "want creation" whereby, rapacious corporations make us want their products. What's more, in their continuing drive for the almighty dollar, they even make us want things that aren't good for us--like war toys, cigarettes, beer, and wine. Therefore, Congress must step in to restrain advertising so that corporations can't make us want what's not good for us.

MINORITY VIEWS
By WALTER E. WILLIAMS

This scenario seems plausible. But how real is it? During the mid-'80s, one of America's largest corporations, Coca-Cola, spent millions upon millions in market research and advertising to make was Ford's greatest single loss.

These and many other instances prove that corporations cannot make us want things that we don't want. But just as important, it shows the difference in businesses' response time to errors compared to government's. Politicians get by with making mistakes year after year (Social Security, welfare, rent controls, 55 mph speed limit), and they get away with it because they don't face the discipline of having to account to a bottom line.

If it sounds plausible, check it out.

Black male chauvinism will stop upward mobility!

By SHERMAN N. MILLER
Call and Post contributing writer

Yelps over obstacles to women's upward mobility still pervade America's media. Nevertheless, the future economic outlook for America's women is the envy of the world.

Male chauvinism is now in retreat in the economic mainstream, so the chasm between dreams and reality is bridged for American women today. But there is a downside to this upward mobility victory. Many married women are finding that marital chauvinism dwarfs work-place chauvinism in impeding their socioeconomic progress.

Let us assess the adverse impact of marital chauvinism through examining an experience shared by a Massachusetts businessman. This businessman says he owns fourteen car dealerships. Many of these businesses are targeted at inner-city markets.

This white fellow said one of his businesses hired an inner-city Black lady with a high school education to be a file clerk. She was promoted to keypunch operator because of excellent job performance. Her high motivation and initiative got her promoted again into the accounting department.

This Black woman's excellent work caught his eye, so she was moved into financial services. She continued to blossom and he put her on commission where she could make big money. Her salary skyrocketed to 50,000 dollars per year.

As I listened to this dealership owner speak, I had a vivid picture of an over-joyed inner-city Black lady who had realized the American Dream: "Pulling herself up by her boot straps."

Suddenly the owner's smile faded away and emotional stress underpinned his voice. "She said, 'I have to quit,'" he declared.

This dealership owner says he offered to adjust her hours to permit her more time at home. He then realized that his efforts were futile because her husband had forced her to choose between her family and her career. This businessman, nonetheless, claims he wants badly to try to talk the Black lady's husband into letting her keep the job.

I was disquieted by this revelation. I queried the businessman about the background of the Black lady's husband. I surmised that the Black husband worked on an unskilled labor job.

This Black lady's plight is far-reaching because it touches the women's movement, the Black community's upward mobility, and high paying job opportunities for non-college graduates.

This Black lady's American dream turned into a nightmare and left the white businessman harboring disdain for Black males' business acumen. He commented that the Black female is on the go but he has reservations about the Black male. He also highlighted cases where immigrants were surpassing low initiative Black males at his dealerships.

His comments hurt deeply as he revealed that General Motors is trying to get Black dealerships started. He claimed to be looking for a Black person to help get started in a dealership. His emotions, on the other hand, seemed to say that the Black lady who quit was on a fast track to owning her own dealership.

I share this tale with both Black and white people of both sexes. I got everything from severe criticism of the Black husband for tomfoolery to praise for the Black woman for choosing her family over her career.

I did not tell most of the whites that the lady and her husband were Black. I wanted to get a mainstream prospectus without the influence of race.

Regardless of how I presented the story, the overwhelming majority of the people in both races thought the husband was a fool. Blacks were more harsh than whites because they saw this Black fellow slamming the door on opportunity for the masses of non-college trained Black people in America. They also felt that white ladies will get a second chance but Black women are doomed when they pass up opportunity.

All the Black women in my small survey asked how could they get a chance to work for this dealership owner. They recognized that this inner-city Massachusetts Black woman had let

Corporate America's most treasured prize slip out of her grasp. "Having the owner as your mentor."

The issue that must be addressed is, "How does a high potential woman married to a low potential man get her husband to accept her success?"

A Black lady (we shall call Mrs. Johnson) who had a comparable experience offered us some ways to avoid the Massachusetts Black lady's dilemma. Johnson felt that the Massachusetts Black lady bore a lot of the blame for her husband's negative reaction to her advancement. She says that a woman must find ways to involve her spouse in her success.

Johnson said her husband paid her way through college to get a Bachelor's Degree. She has also earned a Masters in Business Administration. Johnson's husband is now taking courses himself. Furthermore, they work on projects together where her skills are very important to their success.

Johnson also felt that if a woman is already a professional before she marries a non-professional man, he will more readily accept her status. She says she has seen this scenario working on her job with Black ladies.

I worry because the Massachusetts Black lady's tale is not an isolated incident. This tale, however, suggests that Black males must recognize that Black Americans are still pioneers in Corporate America. Personal sacrifices, therefore, will have to be made for the good of the national Black community.

The next time I hear the national Black leadership ranting and railing about former President Ronald Reagan setting back civil rights 25 years I will wonder, "What is the Black leadership doing to keep Black males from shooting hie Black community in the foot in Mainstream America?"

Thus, I contend that "Black male marital chauvinism will evolve into a catalyst that Mainstream America exploits to stop the Black community's upward mobility in its tracks if it goes unchallenged!"

1989 annual letter to pupils and students

By JUANITA C. CARMAN
Call and Post contributing writer

Dear Pupils and Students:

This is your precious time to be molded into the adult you hope to become someday. This is your time to listen to the elders in your family, neighborhood and church.

These should be interested people who tell you "to be yourself," "to be sweet," "to be alert," "to be courteous," "to be respectful to others," "to weigh and judge for yourself," and not to be easily swayed to the criticisms, advertisements and judgemental statements made about you or about African Americans.

Each of these character traits or analysis are so important in the development of the "total you" and none of these traits or analysis are difficult to attain or understand or to be ignored by you.

Yes, this is your time to weigh and judge what you want to be in life in terms of your career. Oh, Yes! We change our minds a lot during the teenage years but whatever we choose to do will not be far from your initial aim.

To weigh and judge, one must first forget about the individuals or channels, who are unfamiliar to us, who speak negatively about you.

Remember that negativism begets negativism. Let each stumbling block you meet be a big hurdle for you to surmount and surpass to make you a bigger, better and intelligent person. Critics will always be around you.

Again, I am being repetitive in stating that this is your time to be analytical, decisive and judgemental. Specifically speaking, this is your time to avoid and evade being a school dropout, in being involved in any self drug abuse, in becoming a parent at such a young tender age, in being hung up on designer clothes, gold jewelry or being a "big shot."

Enjoy these youthful days—before you know it they are gone. This is your time, your age, your developmental stages. Your parents, relatives, teachers and ministers have all been where you are now (including me).

We all listened to advice given to us by our parents, grandparents, friends of the family, elder nonrelated individuals and neighbors and somehow we were able to escape the pitfalls of life.

Finally, this is your time to be proud of who you are through the grace of God. Look in the mirror and constantly tell yourself that you are a masterpiece from God.

Above all, this is the time to have deep, sincere respect for all people in the African American ethnic group. We have suffered enough as a race so please do not add fuel to our suffering or divisiveness.

Give a smile or a kind word along the way to those of us whom you meet. We must be kind and loving to each other and ourselves before we can be kind to others.

This lack of love and respect and down-playing our own is a deep chasm placed within our lives. Let us use this time to bridge the gap between our own people at home and all over the world.

Let us be proud of our Mother Earth—Africa. The whole world is fighting for ownership of our Ancestral Homeland, Africa has more to offer from its land than all the other countries of this whole world.

Let us talk about Africa, Love Africa, Visit Africa, Flaunt Africa, Honor Africa and be Proud of our Heritage Land—Africa.

May God ever bless you and keep you for another year of our Lord, 1989.

Supporting positive change

In response to the Call and Post's article (August 3) questioning the support of Representative Ray Miller, a large group of Black people, including myself, felt the concept of your article was misleading and damaged the character of Black men; in view of the fact that it has been a continuing struggle to gain a respectful and positive change for the Black communities.

People of the Linden Community, as well as all communities called home by many Black people, have felt and experienced the direct result of Mr. Miller's work.

This letter is not designed to praise Ray Miller, however, it is my attempt to personally express our dissatisfaction with the ambiguity of your article. This type of journalism induces a feeling of low morale for our Black communities and defeats the purpose of our exceptional Black leaders who have strived to open doors for the Black society.

Yes, all Black communities need to be angry about the killing of our youth and about the conditions in which we live. We need to be angry about the drugs taking over our communities and children. But more than getting angry, we need to get busy and support those like Ray Miller who seeks positive changes for us all.

Sincerely,
Leo Hayden

A challenge

Well, Lynn Tolliver and WZAK are at it again exploiting their position as a #1 Black Radio Station by sponsoring yet another degrading contest geared toward the Black community. This time the focus was the stereotypical high buttocks, or Big Butt, that many African-Americans have.

Lynn says it is just a gimmick and I am sure others think it's funny. But, I argue that it was an embarrassing expose of the Black individual, as well as a misguided interpretation of the priorities of the Black community.

In a recent TV 8 interview, Lynn also concluded that the "Butt" is the object of attention, when one is walking down the street.

Well, maybe he is in the habit of walking with his head down, however, many people choose to keep their head up high and proud. They have realized, like myself, that there are too many enriching sights around Cleveland than keep a primary focus on anyone's rear end.

I challenge WZAK to stop being such a hindrance to the Black community by continually promoting activities that reinforce unneeded stereotypes in the larger society.

I would hope the station will re-evaluate its role and responsibility to the Black public and invest more of their creative energy, talent, and influence in positive activities.

Too many of us are so endeared to each other's behinds, that we've forgotten to love our history, our cultures and our minds.

But, WZAK can make the difference. So please stop indulging in the negative advertisement of the African-American public and stop conducting these degrading and unnecessary promotions.

Sincerely,
Joan Taylor-Flonnoy

Future of equality

A recent article in The Wall Street Journal titled "Policy Predicament: Many minorities feel torn by experience of Affirmative Action" provides a basis to analyze and determine if, after twenty five years: Have the affirmative action programs met any or all individual, Corporate and Governmental objectives?

Some minorities believe that affirmative action opened doors that would have otherwise remained closed, forced companies to look to employment groups they had traditionally ignored, and decreased racism by aiding the process of workplace integration.

In my view, these are real benefits of the program and not the objectives of the program.

Governmental agencies and some Corporations have approached affirmative action as a burden to be met as painlessly as possible rather than something that can truly benefit the workplace.

The Supreme Court has begun to turn against the concept of setting quotas for hiring minorities as they toughened the criteria under which a court could impose an affirmative action program on a business of municipality.

In my view due to anticipated demographic changes and the need to compete effectively in an international marketplace, economic necessity may have the most profound and lasting effect on the elimination of prejudice and inequality in the workplace as well as society at large.

Neighborhood schools

A recently formed coalition of Black, Hispanics and whites, whose purpose is to deal with correcting problems in the Cleveland Public Schools, determines the three most pressing problems are discipline, drugs and forced busing.

Something must be done immediately to ensure a safe environment in our schools, so that teachers can teach and students who want to learn, can learn. No child should have to fear for his or her safety while trying to get an education.

The position of the coalition is that Cleveland schools must be released immediately from control of Federal Court, the system must provide quality and equal schools at all grade levels in the various neighborhoods.

The position of the coalition is that one of the key factors to restoring discipline, curbing drug trafficking and improving the quality of education is meaningful parental and community involvement in the schools. To achieve this, we must have the freedom to attend neighborhood schools.

Gumbel's 'R.A.C.E.' finishes out of the money, writer says

By COLLIN A. BRYACE JR.
Call and Post Contributing Writer

S, how did you score on "The R.A.C.E.?" Did you come out as a broadminded, liberal believer in the inherent brotherhood of man? Or as a narrowminded, reactionary separatist?

The R.A.C.E., for those who were not tuned to NBC last week, is an acronym for Racial Attitudes and Consciousness Examination. Designed by the National Opinion Research Center, the test's purpose, in host Bryant Gumbel's words, was to determine "Where you fit in on the scale of American attitudes about race." Gumbel said it is not a purpose of the survey to determine if the respondent is or is not a racist. Hmmm.

Test was broken down into four categories: The Work Place, Socialization, Education, and Crime. In each category, a series of mostly "yes" or "no" questions were asked. Four groups of about 80 people each were assembled by the show's producers in New York, Los Angeles, Milwaukee, and Jackson, Miss. Additionally, a group of prominent Black and white Americans also took the test and were asked to comment. They were Denver Broncos quarterback John Elway; writer Maya Angelou; filmmaker Spike Lee; Ronald Reagan's former Communications Director and syndicated columnist Patrick Buchanan; businesswoman Martha Stewart; and Jonathan Silber, president of Boston University.

When asked for an off-the-cuff opinion of the program, my first response was that it was "basically harmless." Considering that we are talking about commercial network television here, that's not such a put-down as it might seem. Gumbel himself, in explaining the show's purpose, didn't seem to be aiming much higher than harmlessness when he asserted that "we are going to have a little fun" with the topic of race and racism.

It was not the show's premise that was at fault. The weaknesses were in the execution. The survey, for its many faults (e.g., some of those "Yes" or "No" questions made the respondent feel trapped into giving uncomfortably simplistic answers), seemed to be a pretty good device for eliciting some enlightening generalities about American racial attitudes. Unfortunately, although the technology used to conduct, compile and analyze the survey was capable of refining the data and giving readouts according to age, race, gender, education, economic status, place of residence, etc., the show's time constraints made it possible to show more than a fraction of these analyses.

Similarly, while the panel of "star Americans" was well-chosen for their diversity of interests and ideologies, their participation was limited to truncated one-liners that did nothing more than frustrate the viewer by hinting at something that could not be expanded upon. Like when the president of Boston University suggested that the so-called Black underclass was, in effect, created by the war on poverty. Maya Angelou took exception, but briefly, and Silber was never given time to elaborate or defend his point.

And my ears perked up when Pat Buchanan opined that people should have the choice to live where they want and to associate with whom they choose, but that bit of wisdom also got blown away without elaboration. It was one of those statements that can mean different things coming from the mouths of different people. Knowing Buchanan's ideological address is way out on the right flank somewhere, I suspect that his meaning had more to do with avoidance of "undesirables" than it did with true freedom of choice.

If the best that can be said about "The R.A.C.E." is that it was harmless, the worst thing that can be said about it is that it was, after all, commercial television. As such, it was cramped for time, superficial, and evasive of controversy. It was the kind of thing that could have been done one thousand times better by public television, where more time could have been allotted to analysis of the input and to allowing the on-air guests to expound upon their views.

Take a trip to the 'The Colored Museum'

Editor's Note: Have you ever met a person who both demands and inspires excellence? A person who is both competent and confident? A person who can be bitterly honest, even as she hugs you and affirms her love, and you know she means it? Well, enter Yvetta, director of "the Colored Museum." Veteran entertainment writer Gail White-Dixon's interview follows. But if you have never been to a play because you didn't really know what plays are about, this is the one to see, because this play is about you. AM

HOPES AND DREAMS

By ARCENAUX MACKLIN

"I absolutely love this play! This play is entertaining. It's funny. It's got music. It's got dance. It'll make you laugh. It'll make you cry. Black folk. White folk. Whoever. The truth is the Truth. So come on out and enjoy yourself. Make yourself comfortable, because you're in for a ride," says the director of "The Colored Museum," Yvetta. "The Colored Museum", by African-American playwright George

...directs colored museum

C. Wolfe, is the latest production staged by Contemporary American Theatre Company (CATCO). "Museum" is a series of 11 revue sketches that satirize what the playwright calls "the myths and madness of Black/Negro/colored Americans." Among the "exhibits" in the museum are: a stewardess on a ship; two models trapped in the pages of EBONY; and a parody of Aunt Jemima. The play involves dancing and song styles that range from blues to gospel to pop.

To effectively bring together the various elements of such a diverse production, a theater must have a dynamic director in control. That's where Yvetta comes in.

Yvetta's credentials tell you all about her background and why she's more than qualified to direct this play, but they don't bring out her wit, African style, charm, and beauty which overflow in just one conversation with her. Listening to her read excerpts from the play, there's no doubt in my mind that Yvetta could, and would love to play every part.

Yvetta is one of Cleveland's best-known actresses. She was a member of the acting company at the Cleveland Playhouse for eight seasons, where she also directed and taught acting. She has also worked for 17 years with Cleveland's Karamu Theatre, the oldest African-American community theatre in the country. Yvetta trained at the Duke Ellington School for the Performing Arts in Washington, D.C.; the Southeast Academy of Theatre and Music in Atlanta, Georgia and at Case Western Reserve University. The list goes on and on about where she's been and what she's done, but her Columbus directorial debut should speak for itself in the talents that she possesses. She also serves as choreographer for "Museum."

If some people think that "Museum" does not offer the kind of "positive" African-American images that they want to see, Yvetta will tell you very quickly that the play contains "the good, the bad, and the ugly." She also reiterated, "the truth is the truth. Who can take issue with that?" She then added, "If it (the play) was demeaning or degrading, I would have no parts of it." Yvetta encourages people to come out and see for themselves what "The Colored Museum" is all about. "You can't sit behind your door and peep out your window and experience anything. You've got to open your door; open your window, and get out there in the mix. That's the only way to experience anything - whether it be enlightening or encouraging. How do you even know to be repulsed if you're not even out there?" Yvetta is about to open the doors of "The Colored Museum." If I were you, I'd be in line to buy a ticket.

CATCO's production of "The Colored Museum" opens on September 14 and runs through October 7. For ticket information, call the CATCO box office at 461-0010. CATCO is located at 512 N. Park Street, one block west of High Street and one block south of Goodale Street.

3rd annual Louisiana fest promises to be big success

The third annual Louisiana Cabaret Fest promises to be an even bigger and better event than last year's successful outing, according to Kevin A. Stephens, a member of the Southern University Alumni Columbus Chapter, sponsors of the event.

The all-you-can-eat Louisiana Fest will be held at the Columbus Grotto Temple, 3790 Agler Rd. on Friday, Sept. 29, from 7 p.m. to midnight. Musical entertainment will be provided by a live D.J.

Fresh seafood flown in from Louisiana especially for this occasion will be prepared on site by the alumni. On the menu will be gumbo, dirty rice, shrimp, Louisiana catfish and much, much more.

"Last year over 100 tickets were sold. This year Louisiana Fest promises to be bigger and better with tickets already exceeding last year's total sales and we still have two weeks before the fest," Stephens said.

The alumni chapter, chartered by the state in 1985, was founded by Freddie Williams, class of 1951. The chapter consists of more than 30 active members. Their annual fest is a part of the scholarship fund drive to help a qualified Ohio student who will attend Southern University. The first scholarship in 1987 went to Jennell Cockrell, daughter of John and Catherine Cockrell of Columbus.

"Over the years our chapter participates in the College Fair and we make donations to programs that help to promote education to the needy," Stephens said. "We make donations to other alumni and fraternity organizations, just to name a few."

The men and women of the Southern University Alumni Columbus Chapter invites everyone to come out to the fest, enjoy great Louisiana-style cuisine and entertainment while supporting a good cause. Tickets are $20 per person and can be purchased in advance by calling Fred Williams at 471-3593; John Cockrell, 890-9775 or Rhonda Tipton at 868-0625.

Full house to see Bucks open 100th football season

Ohio State will open its 100th season of intercollegiate football by playing Oklahoma State of Stillwater, Oklahoma on Saturday, Sept. 16 at 1:30 p.m. at the Ohio Stadium before an estimated crowd of 88,000.

Oklahoma State will be making its first appearance in Columbus. Last year the Cowboys were 10-2 and defeated Wyoming 44-14 in the Holiday Bowl. However, they will be without the service of their Heisman Trophy winner, Barry Sanders, who dropped out of school to play pro football.

Even without Sanders, the Cowboys will have quarterback Mike Gundy, a real gunslinger, who threw for 2,163 yards and 19 touchdowns last year.

Ohio State head football coach John Cooper will have something on his side. He will have 15 starters returning to greet him on his second season in Columbus. All-American hopeful tailback Carlos Snow and tight end Jeff Ellis, as well as starting quarterback Greg Frey are expected to lead the Buckeyes to a festive centennial season.

Cooper expressed his optimism about the coming season. "We expect to be a better football team than we were a year ago. We (the coaching staff) know the players better and the players are more confident in our system. That itself is a big plus."

Three of the Buckeyes returning seniors on the offensive line will be tackles Joe Staysniak (6-5, 290) and Tim Moxley (6-7, 310) and guard Jeff Davidson (6-5, 305) will be expected to open gaping holes for Snow and fullback Scottie Graham (5-10, 225).

Cooper has confidence his defense will improve this season. "We have worked extremely hard on defense," he says. "Having (inside linebacker) Derek Isaman (he sat out last year in order to try out for the Olympic boxing team) and tackle Mike Showalter back helps, and we have some freshmen who I feel good about."

Other seniors on defense will include end Srecko Zisakovic (6-5, 250), nose guard Pat Thomas (6-1, 260), linebacker Orlando Craig (6-1, 215), cornerback David Brown (6-0, 182) and safety Zack Dumas (6-2, 192).

The Buckeyes will travel to the west coast on Sept. 23 to play Southern California. The game with the Trojans will be televised nationally by ABC.

Children's run

Youth eight to 15 can get the run down on a runaway success that runs downtown streets at the 25 Columbus Recreation and Parks Department community centers. Applications for the Second Annual Children's Run for Fun are run off and available until they run out.

The Run for Fun, in conjunction with the Columbus Marathon will run at 10 a.m. after the adult race begins on Sunday, November 12. Over 2,000 youth are expected to run over a two km (1.2 mile) course that begins on High Street and finishes at Broad and Third streets. Competitors will be started in waves, based on age, beginning with the oldest. Each entrant will receive an official Run for Fun T-shirt, a bronze medallion, free refreshments and special seating to watch the finish of the Columbus Marathon. The fee for the race is $5.

Applications will be available through suburban recreation centers and Columbus and suburban schools after September 11. Honorary chairman are Columbus City Councilmen, Be. Eppy, his twin daughters, Laura and Lynn and Olympic runner, Butch Reynolds. Sponsors for the run are Just Sweets, Kroger and Excess. For more information call 645-3300.

Follis led Black pioneers in pro football

By JOE HERRIGAN
Hall of Fame Researcher

Although he is recognized today as the first professional football player, William (Pudge) Heffelfinger's pro debut in 1892 wasn't exactly headline news. In fact, his acceptance of $500 to play a single game for the Allegheny Athletic Association wasn't reported—no doubt they didn't know about it—by the local press.

Evidence of Heffelfinger's "first" came some 80 years later when Pro Football Hall of Fame officials discovered the AAA's accounting ledger with its notation of payment to the Yale All-America. The now historic document can be seen at the pro football museum in Canton, Ohio, in a display commemorating the birth of professional football.

In the same display is a sampling of early-day pro teams, including one from Shelby, Ohio. While not too unlike the others, the 1902 Shelby team photo does have at least one notable difference.

Upon close examination it becomes apparent that one player is slightly offset from the rest. He is seated between and at the end of the first and second rows of the three-row arrangement. Standing rigidly behind the player with his hand firmly placed on his shoulder like a protective father is the team's promoter.

This slightly odd arrangement of people in any other photo would go unnoticed. However, in this case the Shelby player receiving special treatment is Charles Follis, the first documented Black professional football player.

Like Heffelfinger, Follis's pioneering role was not recognized by sports historians until many years later. Unlike the Heffelfinger debut, however, Follis's professionalism was reported by the local press.

In 1973, researchers Bob Seaburn and Milt Roberts rediscovered halfback Follis's on-field achievements while leafing through the pages of the Shelby Daily Globe. The goal of the research by Seaburn and Roberts was to locate evidence that Follis had played as a professional. After hours of research, Roberts came across an article in the September 16, 1904, edition that announced Follis had signed a contract for that season.

Although the researchers knew Follis had played for the Shelby club beginning in 1902, they were unable to cite proof that the 1902 team was professional. However, recent research by the Hall of Fame does indicate that the 1902 Shelby Athletic Club may indeed have been pro, which would change Follis's "first" by two years.

After Follis, only five Blacks appeared in the play-for-pay version of football during the pre-NFL years. The next to emerge was Charles (Doc) Baker, who earned his nickname while serving as an aide to an Akron, Ohio, physician, played halfback for the Akron Indians from 1906 until 1908, and a final season in 1911.

The best-known Black pro during the pre-NFL years may have been Henry McDonald. A flashy halfback, McDonald began his pro career in 1911 with the Rochester (New York) Jeffersons.

Born in Haiti in 1890, he came to the United States when he was 5 after his natural parents agreed to his adoption by an American coconut and banana importer.

After spending his early childhood in Canandaigua, New York, he and his family moved to Rochester. There he became the first Black to graduate from Rochester's East High School. Almost immediately after graduation he began a pro football career that would last until 1917.

During his seven-year career, McDonald recalled only one serious racial incident. The unfortunate episode occurred in 1917, when McDonald and an All-Syracuse team traveled to Ohio to meet the Jim Thorpe-led Canton Bulldogs. A troublemaker when Canton's Earle (Greasy) Neale threw McDonald out of bounds and made his feelings concerning the Black player quite clear. "Black is Black and white is white where I come from and the two don't mix Neale," snapped.

McDonald, an accomplished boxer, stood ready to answer Neale's challenge. Thorpe intervened. "We're here to play football," McDonald recalled Thorpe telling his teammate. "I never had any trouble after that," he said. "Thorpe's word was law on that field."

The last Black to play exclusively during the pre-NFL years was Gideon (Charlie) Smith, a tackle, who played just one game—and only as a late fourth-quarter substitute—for the 1915 Canton Bulldogs. But, he made a game-saving fumble recovery that preserved a 6-0 Canton victory over Massillon for the "state championship."

Finally, though both are better known as the first Blacks to compete in the National Football League, Robert (Rube) Marshall, an end with the Rock Island Independents, and Frederick (Fritz) Pollard, a halfback with the Akron Pros, actually began their pro careers in 1919, a year before the birth of the organization that became the NFL. Capital University will open its home football season on Sept. 16 against Marietta at Bernlohr Stadium. All of Capital's other home games will be played at Cooper Stadium.

The Crusaders opened their season by defeating Bethany 30-14 at Bethany, West Virginia. Curtis Richardson, Northland, scored two touchdowns to lead the Crusaders to their first victory of the season.

Head coach Roger Welsh is satisfied with the progress his team is making this year. "We are not afraid to play anyone," he said.

Richardson and defensive back Charles Gibson, Columbus Marion-Franklin, have been named to the Second Annual Don Hansen Football Gazette Pre-Season All-American Team.

One of the fastest players on the Crusaders is split end Rob DeJarnette formerly of Columbus Briggs. DeJarnette was the top kick returner last season. He also scored three touchdowns.

Senior fullback James Terry from Hamilton is expected to see more action with the Crusaders this year.

Beulah Park opens

Thorough racing returns to Central Ohio on Friday, Sept. 15 with the opening of the 68-day fall meeting at Beulah Park in Grove City, Ohio. The first weekend of racing is highlighted by more than $85,000 in stakes purses, said Director of Racing Michael Weiss. Friday's 10-race opening card features the $30,000 Tah Dah Stakes, a six-furlong contest for two-year-old fillies. Twenty-five Ohio registered fillies have been nominated for the event, Weiss said.

The weekend's racing continues with Saturday's $35,000-added Budweiser Columbus Classic Handicap for three year olds and up, and Sunday's $20,000-added Budweiser Columbus Damsel Handicap for fillies and mares three years old and up. Both races will be run at the distance of six furlongs.

The weekend also includes two of the 20 scheduled live TV simulcasts of top Thoroughbred racing events from across the country. On Saturday, Beulah Park patrons will see Belmont Stakes winner Easy Goer in the $750,000 Woodward at Belmont Park. Easy Goer is considered the leading candidate for Horse of the Year honors.

This fall will also mark the introduction of the "Superfecta," a new way to wager at Beulah. "The Superfecta has been one of the most successful wagers at other tracks and is being brought to Beulah at popular demand," said General Manager Dick Wilson. The Superfecta requires the better to pick the first four horses across the finish line in exact order.

Beulah Park will race six days a week through Dec. 4. Post time will be 1:30 p.m. through Oct. 21. On Oct. 22, the track will change to a 12:30 post time which will remain in effect through the remainder of the meet.

OSU signs top track stars

Ohio State women's track and cross country coach Mamie Rallins has announced the signing of six prepsters, including state titlists from Ohio, New Jersey, Wisconsin and Illinois, to letters of intent.

"These girls will definitely help us fill holes in the sprint events," says Rallins, in reference to the departure of senior sprints standouts Bridgette Tate, Felicia White and Jocelyn Hayes. "In addition, they will help us develop strong relay teams over the next couple of years."

Joyce Finley, from Proviso West H.S. in Maywood, ILL., was ranked second nationally in the heptathlon among high schoolers in 1989. An accomplished hurdler, she was third in the 100-meter hurdles at the Illinois state meet and has a career-best time of 14.3 seconds in that event. Finley also finished fifth in the heptathlon at the 1989 TAC Junior Nationals in Columbus, and was invited to train at the Elite Junior hurdle camp at the U.S. Olympic Training Center in Colorado Springs, Colo.

Janis Foster, a sprinter from Evanston Township H.S. in Evanston, Ill., captured Illinois state titles in the 100- and 400-meter dashes in 1989. In addition, she finished second in the 400 and seventh in the 100 at the always strong Keebler Meet. The product of Greater Chicago's high school sprint competition, Foster shows career bests of 24.4 seconds in the 200 meters and 54.5 in the 400.

Arnita Green, a hurdler from Delsea Regional H.S. in Williamstown, N.J., won titles in the 100- and 400-meter hurdles at the 1989 New Jersey state championships. In addition, she anchored Delsea's 4 x 400 relay quartet to a second-place finish at the same meet.

Green, who has been running competitive track for just two years, touts top times of 13.9 seconds in the 100 hurdles and 59.9 in the 400 hurdles. Also an outstanding student, she is planning to major in pharmacy at OSU.

Monique Hayes, a sprinter and jumper from Rufus King H.S. in Milwaukee, Wis., was a member of Wisconsin's 1989 state champion 4 x 100 meter relay team. She also earned runner-up laurels in the triple jump at the same meet. Hayes, with career bests of 11.8 seconds in the 100 meters and 38.08 feet in the triple jump, will compete in the relays at OSU when she is not jumping.

Tara Miley, a hurdler from Northmoor H.S. in Galien, Ohio, captured the 1989 Ohio Class A state title in the 100-meter hurdles after finishing second in the same event a year ago. Miley broke Felicia White's state prep record in the hurdles during last winter's indoor season.

Heather Rawlings, a distance runner from Verona, Wis., H.S. was the 1989 Wisconsin Class B state titlist in the mile with a time of 4:58. She made the switch to the mile in 1989 after garnering third place in the 800 meters at the '88 state meet. Rawlings, who continued to improve as the season progressed, also plans to compete in cross country at Ohio State.

Revenge time at Whetstone?

LINDEN-McKINLEY Coach Paul Hudson warns senior Captains Richard Conner, Dwight Carter and Kevin Maynus, that revenge may be a motivational factor for host Whetstone when the Panthers meet the Braves on Friday (7:30 p.m.). Whetstone, fresh off a 40-0 trouncing of Northland, their first win in four starts, haven't forgotten that it was Linden's overtime victory last year that kept the Braves out of the state playoffs. Linden, 0-3, must stop the aerial threat of Whetstone quarterback Mark Howell, left, and wide receiver Herschel Jackson. (PHOTOS By TERRY GILLIAM)

Melani Anderson, our only Black attorney, who has a B.S., M.S. Juris D. was not promoted to Staff Attorney II. When that position became available and posted in May, Melani applied for it. Within 24 hours the posting was taken down and the position was not filled. Melani was the only attorney on staff that was eligible for the position. We had two new white attorneys but at that time they were still on probation. Melani inquired about the position on several occasions and was told by John Peden, Chief of Legal (white) that he decided not to fill that position because the other two Staff Attorneys (both white) had nothing to look forward to. When Melani put in her resignation on August 22, that same position became available and posted on August 23. The closing date was Sept. 6, the same day Melani's resignation became effective. When Melani told Pat

Tope, Personnel Officer, (white) that she wanted to be considered for the position Pat became upset and stated "Oh I see the scenario." Also Melani had requested to use up her compensatory time. The Director, who at the time was Jack Marchbanks, and John Peden, Chief of Litigation approved the hours that she had requested. After taking the time off Melani returned to work only to find out that the time that had previously been approved had now been denied. As of this day she is still waiting to here what they plan to do about compensating her for the time she took off.

When Fiscal Officer, David Williams (Black) requested a secretary on numerous occasions he was repeatedly denied one. However, our acting Fiscal Officer (white) has been given a secretary, Kimberly Brown (Black) who has been with the agency for almost 11 years recently lost her supervisory position (supervised 16 people) supposedly due to "reorganization." She is now secretary for the Fiscal Officer. When Kim was told about this reorganization on Aug. 22, at 11:25 a.m. she was given until 4 p.m. that afternoon to make a decision as to whether or not she would accept the position of Fiscal Secretary or if she wanted to stay in the Legal Division she could have a secretarial position but would have to take a cut in pay. When Kim accepted the position of Fiscal Secretary late that afternoon she was told on Wednesday, Aug. 23, that she had to vacate her office first thing in the put children in large institutions if it's at all possible to keep them in their homes.

With $900,000 in the county's budget for prevention programs, FCCS is contracting with community agencies to prevent the problems that lead to children being taken out of their homes.

"We're trying our very best to treat the whole family so the child doesn't have to be removed from home. It is best to keep the child at home and in their own community," Sandberg said.

During a recent survey of all agency's providing Franklin Village type care, Sandberg said they found that 70 percent of the beds were empty. With the county trying to contain cost and provide more in home treatment and service to improve family life, "it just isn't cost effective to keep the cottages open, half empty."

She said the closings are consistent with what's going on everywhere, and despite the downsizing there have been no layoffs of staff.

"If something changes and we need more beds we'll reopen the cottages," Sandberg said.

The shift changes were due to the closings and people with desirable shifts had to be moved to accommodate the children early mornings before school, after school and on weekends.

She said she has no intention of closing Franklin Village and is only thinking about the best way to treat children.

"With the schools becoming more pre-active in handling troubled children we may see even less children coming into residential care."

King library celebrates its 20th anniversary

SHIRLEY WALKER
...library manager

...pharmacist

It was 20 years ago that Waldo Tyler, a local pharmacist, suggested a new library being built on Columbus' near-east side be named after slain civil rights activist Martin Luther King, Jr.

Tyler's suggestion was taken to heart, and this month the Martin Luther King Branch of the Columbus Metropolitan Library is celebrating the 20th anniversary of its opening.

In honor of the Library's anniversary, a Special Luncheon will be held at the Martin Luther King Center for the Performing Arts, 867 Mt. Vernon Ave., Sept. 16 from 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. Tickets for 200 people will be sold and are available for a $15 donation to the Friends of the Columbus Metropolitan Library, sponsors of the luncheon. Tickets may be purchased at the Library, 1600 E. Long St.

Luncheon attendees will view a program on the history of the Library entitled, Looking Beyond the Horizon: the Martin Luther King Branch Library 20 Years and Beyond, accompanied with narration and music.

Several individuals who played a key role in the development of the branch are expected to attend, as are previous managers of the Library. In addition, five businesses and organizations which have provided continuous support for the Martin Luther King Branch Library and its activities during the last five years, will be recognized. They are: the National Technical Association; the Friends of Art for Cultural Enrichment; the Near-East Area Commission; the Marble Gang Restaurant; and WVKO radio.

During its 20-year history, the Martin Luther King Branch has become one of the most widely recognized libraries in Columbus, said Manager Shirley Walker. The branch was designed to serve as a neighborhood library and continues in that capacity 20 years later. It was the first branch of the Columbus Metropolitan Library to receive significant community input, from the naming of the branch to area, residents having a say in the design of the Library, Walker said.

Today the Martin Luther King Branch Library's selection of materials has evolved into a well-rounded collection, tailored to meet the needs of the community it serves. Chief among the Library's materials is the Black Heritage Collection, a group of books written by Black authors or dealing with Black culture.

The AIDS risks for Black women have been exposed to the virus or the disease by an apparently small group: undercover bisexuals with a double sex life and a high-risk factor.

For Black women across the nation, the increasing cases have become the source of a flood tide of anxiety and doubt about their risk of contracting AIDS by an unknown bisexual lover.

One of the ways to stop the spreading of the deadly virus is to get tested.

The test for the antibody to the AIDS virus developed in 1985. This test detects an antibody which is a natural protein product of the immune system, which is directed at the virus. It does not detect the virus itself. A person in a high-risk group, who tests negative for the antibody has at least a 95 percent chance of not being infected.

Failure to detect an infected individual occurs in three situations: the antibody could take 24-25 weeks to develop after infection; for a false-negative test, few individuals who seem incapable of developing antibodies are readily available by currently used methods; persons infected with severe AIDS, may stop making specific antibody. A negative test is not a total guarantee of the absence of infection.

According to health experts, it is not irrelevant whether a person is gay, bisexual or heterosexual, who is engaging in casual sex without insisting a condom be worn, is engaging in irresponsible, possibly suicidal behavior. Where the Black community is concerned, it is genocidal behavior. When individuals engage in sex, they are having sex with that person's entire sexual drug-use history.

Black women in this era must assume that the person is potentially infectious and insist on the wearing of a condom. Their very survival depends on it.

her, he said. She disputes his claim and has an appointment to file an official claim of discrimination with the OCRC on Sept. 25.

Tom Perry Sr. lost his composure and hit a white man two weeks ago during a football game between Beechcroft High School and DeSales Catholic School. Perry was working the side lines on DeSales side of the field when he heard someone behind him say "kill them goddamn niggers." According to Perry he turned around and asked the man why he said what he did and the man replied, "because I liked to say that." Perry, whose son is captain of the Beechcroft football team, admits that he lost control and punched the man.

Both school's officials claim it was an isolated and unfortunate incident and hoped to work things out quietly as to not bring about any negative publicity on the schools or their teams.

What is the meaning of isolation? Does that mean something only happens once in the same place and if so what do you call similar situations that are happening in different locations, but are of the same mindset? A concerned employee of the Child Support Enforcement Agency, on this same page, points out some of the very problems mentioned here. However, all of the situations he writes about all occurred in one place.

'I'M AGAINST IT'

Speaking of old classics, can't do much better than the Marx Brothers in the 1932 film "Horse Feathers" (MCA, $39.95). Grocco and the gang set the tone of this irreverent comedy about campus life with the opening song, "I'm Against It."

This film features some witty stuff, as Grocco plays a college president determined to build up the football team at Huxley College. Written by humorist S.J. Perelman, the film features Harpo as a dog catcher, Chico in twin roles, one as an athlete and the other as a bootlegger and Zeppo as the president's son.

CMACAO public hearing to assess needs of the poor

In preparation for the submission of the Columbus Metropolitan Area Community Action Organization's (CMACAO) funding proposal to the State of Ohio Department of Development (ODOL), the agency's Board of Trustees will hold a Public Hearing on Wednesday, Sept. 20, 10 a.m. through noon at the Columbus Music Hall, 734 Oak St.

The purpose of the hearing is to solicit public input on community needs, specifically, the needs of low-income and working poor people. CMACAO will incorporate findings from the public hearing into their 1990 Community Services Block Grant (CSBG) proposal.

Private citizens, along with representatives from churches, health and human service agencies, child care centers, and business and industry are encouraged to attend and make a statement on what they believe to be the most pressing needs of the community.

Last year, more than 200 people attended the hearing and provided input for the agency's proposal. Among the issues addressed were homelessness, hunger, female heads of households, childcare, employment, health care including alcohol and chemical substance abuse, senior citizen services, and violence and crime.

During the 1988 service year, with $897,935 in funding from ODOL and additional support from other city, state and private sources, CMACAO's Human Services Department was able to provide services to clients which

- included:
- 914 households received rental or mortgage payment assistance which provided 85,800 days of shelter;
 - 12,311 food pantry orders were filled;
 - 24,216 commodity food requests were honored;
 - 6,702 individuals received clothing or other household items;
 - 2,254 children received toys during the Christmas holidays;
 - 5,000 people received income tax preparation assistance;

AIDS task force holds meeting

By PAMELA D. CARTER
Call and Post Staff Writer

A focus group of the Minority Task Force on AIDS held a meeting on Wednesday, Sept. 6 at the OSU Black Extension Center, to discuss ways to increase community awareness of AIDS, in the Black community.

Some of the focus groups for the force are: Alternate methods to educate the Black community, identification of appropriate messages and strategize specific ways to educate the Black community through the media.

Municipal Court Judge, Janet Jackson, said she decided to become the chairperson of the task force due to the mechanisms used to disseminate information about AIDS.

"We need to come together and look at the issue throughout the Black community," said Jackson.

"We want to know specifically what persons needs are and how to address those needs."

Rev. Keith Troy, chairperson of the public relations focus group and pastor of New Salem Baptist Church, said there needs to be more consistency in the messages given about the virus.

The task force is going to take an aggressive approach to educate the public about AIDS. They feel youths want adults to be honest with their information about sex and the virus.

"Kids want to know where you are coming from," said Troy.

"They do not have any problems telling adults what they want them to know. I think adults should take the same approach. Conversation is very important."

AIDS training for clergy and seminarians offered

The training session will be held Friday, Oct. 6, from 5-9 p.m. at Trinity Lutheran Seminary, 2199 E. Main St. Facilitators include CATF client services director and support committee members in conjunction with psychologists, social workers and counselors.

Training will cover the medical, social and grief issues associated with ministering to persons with AIDS.

Interested clergy/seminarians should contact the Columbus AIDS Task Force at 488-2437.

The deadline for applications is Sept. 15.

Buddy training is also available to others who wish to help meet the needs of persons with AIDS. The next training will be in November. Those interested should also contact the Columbus AIDS Task Force.

The Columbus AIDS Task Force (CATF), a non-profit AIDS service agency, will be providing a Buddy Training Workshop for clergy and seminarians this fall. This is the second specialized training CATF has offered for priests, ministers and theology students.

"We are pleased to announce this fall workshop," said Annette Carter, client services director for CATF. "Our first one, held this past spring, was a tremendous success. Positive response to that workshop has enabled us to do a second."

AKA to hold AIDS vigil

Alpha Sigma Omega Chapter of Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, Inc., along with the Columbus Minority AIDS Taskforce and the Columbus Health Department will sponsor a "Silent Vigil for AIDS, Friday, September 15 at 9 p.m. Members and interested participants will assemble at BICENTENNIAL PARK at 8:45 p.m. for the walk to CITY HALL.

The guest speakers will be Dr. Victoria Cargill, University Hospital of Cleveland, Department of Internal Medicine and AIDS Educator, Rochelle Martin, Columbus Health Department.

Their remarks will center on "AIDS and the Black Community: A Charge to Keep." Regional Director, Soror Emma Henderson said the vigil has evolved from the concern of the devastating effect of AIDS in the Black community in the heterosexual, drug-addicted and homosexual populations.

The Columbus community is invited to participate. Further information can be secured by calling Claybrook at 365-4290.

Hicks fired from alternative center

By PAMELA D. CARTER
Call and Post Staff Writer

Dolores Hicks, former secretary for the Center for Alternatives, 111 Hamilton Park, said she was fired because she told the truth about the misuse of government funds.

According to Hicks, the questions raised by Rep. Ray Miller were very appropriate. "I applaud Rep. Miller for sticking his neck out and having this agency investigated," she said. "What I told him was the truth and because of that,

I lost my job. I am eight months pregnant and I really needed the medical benefits from my employment."

Hicks said she was told to be loyal to the agency and if she wasn't, she would be fired. "Two of my payroll checks bounced and I feel it was done to make things harder for me. The truth is the truth. It seems like everybody is wrong except for this agency."

Hicks said the agency is audited by their independent auditor and she feels a federal investigation should be done.

Myrtle Dorsey, executive director for the center, said the center's attorneys are handling the situation. "Her checks did bounce, but it was due to a late allocation and not to make things harder for her," Dorsey said. "We have had work related problems with Mrs. Dorsey for a while. We gave her a cashier's check on Sept. 8."

Hicks picketed the center until she received the money from her dishonored checks. However, she is not satisfied with just the money. She has filed a complaint against the agency with the Ohio Civil Rights Commission.

"I feel that I was treated unfairly and I want justice to be done," she said.

Police department's first all-white class in 11 years

By PAMELA D. CARTER
Call and Post Staff Writer

The Columbus Police Department has an all-white recruit class approximately one month after U.S. District Judge James L. Graham, ruled the city no longer had to report its progress in hiring Blacks for the Division of Police. This is the first time this has happened in 11 years.

REV. DAVID TODD
...minister

Columbus Safety Director, Alphonso Montgomery, said there were Blacks who scored high enough on the test to pass, but did not make the top 45 list, of the highest scores. "Selection is based on ranking of the civil service examination," he said.

The ruling by Graham ended the case of Clyde Haynie vs. former Safety Director Bernard Chupka. Haynie alleged the hiring policy discriminated against Blacks. Graham ruled on July 30, that the city had reached its requirement of 14.9 percent, and the law was no longer needed. To reach this goal at least 30 percent of each recruit class was made up of Blacks and 25 percent women.

Civil service regulations will be used in selecting recruits. Under these regulations, recruits will be chosen in order of scoring on the civil service examination.

Police Chief, Dwight D. Joseph said three Black applicants scored high enough on the examination but were eliminated during background searches. He also said there is growing competition in the Columbus business community for qualified Black candidates.

Leaders in the Black community are not satisfied with these explanations.

Sybil McNabb, president of the NAACP, said there is no way they are going to accept not enough qualified Blacks as a reason for an all-white recruit class. "I feel this is a reflection of the Supreme Court decisions affecting the city level," she said. "After these court-orders are reversed, they're saying business as usual. There was an article published that sounded as if the NAACP was co-signing the actions of the police department, however, we are not. We are in the process of discussing and examining this situation more closely."

Jerry Hammond, president of Columbus City Council, said it is extremely disturbing and coincidental that this situation should arise with the lifting of the court ruling. "I'm hoping that this is just circumstance and not an indication of rising and racial tensions," he said.

Rev. David Todd, president of the Coalition of Concerned Clergy, said he is quite disappointed to see a recruit class without any qualified Black participants. "I think this is a strategy of the past in effect today," Todd said. "I thought we were making progress but this has set us back. There needs to be a remedy to this. The law should be reapplied. We do feel something is wrong and will meet the necessary people to address this problem."

Rep. Ray Miller said he is also very disappointed with the timing of the situation and the lack of commitment on the part of the city. "I can't believe that's the truth," Miller said. "I would have to believe the Rinehart administration will come up with an aggressive program to recruit and hire Blacks."

The Division of Police has requested $171,000 from City Council in 1990 to expand its minority recruiting.

The kangaroo cannot jump if its tail is lifted off the ground. It needs its tail for pushing off.

MARGE AUX'S MARQUIS

BY MARGARET ROBERTS

Labor day--- fun or work?

"Happy Birthday to you, happy birthday to you, happy birthday, dear Labor Day..." One never thinks very much about the birthday of holidays. Most of us just look forward to them as a special time to be involved with family and friends or just to relax at home and do nothing special. So, it is with Labor Day.

Although Labor Day is gone for another year, we look forward to its return next year. This year of 1989 marked the 107th or the 102nd birthday of his holiday. We can thank such people as Samuel Gompers, a stalwart in the rights of working men...and in 1882, it was basically men. We all know Labor Day to be a holiday for the workers of America. Canada and Australia also recognize this day. In our country and in Canada, it is a legal holiday. 107 years ago, a labor organization called the Knights of Labor called the first Monday in September, Labor Day. Later, working folk rallied to get states to make it a legal holiday. Five years later, Oregon was the first state to designate it as such. So, you might want to say that the legal holiday's birthday was really in 1887 making it 102 years old this year.

MARJORIE HOLLAND

Whichever date you chose, I bet 'cha that you took full advantage of the long weekend to either close up your Summer cottage, have a cook-out or to travel to not-too-far locations. Although you might have had lots of fun doing those things, you still worked at making them successful. Now, on the other hand, some folks just slept-in and enjoyed the extra day of relaxation.

One very sad note entered our holiday as we learned of the passing of Mrs. William Preston (Lavenia). Her bright humor, kind heart and sincerity will be missed greatly. We all know that we are better people for having known Lou.

Mrs. Jack Suddereth (Charlene) spent the day working in her yard and flower garden. Jack enjoyed playing a bit of tennis with his physician's blessing. Now, the way Charlene spent her day seems like work to me, but not to her because she dearly loves working in her yard.

Mrs. Charlene Thomas (Erma), a former Columbus resident, left the hot sun of Florida to visit her hometown and relatives in Columbus. She was back in Sunny Florida for Labor Day, but her mother, Mrs. Booker, and friends are always glad whenever she can come home.

While others were coming to Columbus, Mr. and Mrs. William Prillerman (Margaret) were going elsewhere. They went to the 11th annual jazz festival in Chicago. They had a ball! As you know, Bill is a jazz enthusiast and was in rapture listening to such jazz greats as Jimmy Smith, Kenny Burrell, Walter Bishop, Charles Erland, Jimmy McGriff and Dizzy Gillespie and his big band. Pat Miller joined the Prillermans on this jazz-lovers holiday.

Colling-out at home for her family was Mrs. Dorre McDaniel. She cooked all of the foods her mom and sisters enjoy. Although Dorre made this a fun time, she also found time to distribute clothing to needy girls and their mothers in conjunction with the All for One Group with which she is involved. (I'll tell you about that group

THE MOTIVATOR

Healthy body, healthy mind

In order for a race car to operate at its maximum performance level, it must be in tip top condition. The engine must be clean, the battery fully charged, and it must be filled with the right kind of gas and oils for high performance maintenance. And just like the race car, in order for humans to function at their peak proficiency level, they must be in great condition as well.

Experts in the health industry point out that proper exercise and nutrition aids in mental alertness and concentration. It also promotes self-discipline and improves one's self-image.

Exercise does many things. It reduces improves posture, helps the heart work more efficiently, plus a host of other benefits. And of course, when you eat properly, you reduce the risk of suffering from high blood pressure, diabetes, cardiovascular disease and some cancers.

Most people know what foods are good for them and which are not. You don't have to be a nutritional expert to know that sugars, starches and caffeine are not health foods. (No matter how bad you might like them to be.) But if you're not sure what foods you should be eating, get a book on nutrition. (There are plenty out there.) A good rule of thumb is to eat plenty of the foods that you don't like, and eliminate the majority of the foods that you do like. I know it doesn't sound great, but your body will thank you for it.

In order to become the best that you can be, you have to take care of yourself physically and mentally. If one is neglected, the other suffers.

The bottom line is right action begets right results. If you do the right things for your body and mind, you'll reap the right rewards. So take charge of your life and be healthy! stress, promotes a healthy complexion,

Change through self-empowerment

How do we become intune with this energy source with is within us to make positive change in our lives? Perhaps a reminder of the still, peace-gifts are not forced upon us. They are a two-part process; the actual giving of something and the acceptance. Have you accepted your power?

Self-empowering gifts are many and when we are aware of them and utilize them properly, we are empowered by them.

DIRECTIONS IN LIFE

MARIE KABIA

Question: Did you know that life was neutral and whatever you demand of it through your consciousness, it would be done unto you?

Question: Did you know that the universe (our Creator), has already given all there is to get and you must claim it—you must allow it to come in—that it is not necessary to struggle always?

Question: Did you know that your body is an energy field with a magnetic force that flows through you and the conditions you expose your body and mind to determines the strenght of your energy field?

Too often, too many of us go through our entire lives unaware of the inner powers that are dormant within us. Resulting in unnecessary suffering and struggle.

So how do we empower ourselves to withstand the negative forces in life?

ful, small, yet authoritative voice within the midst of our being would be a good place to start. Our Intuition, "Intuition" is the direct knowing or learning of something without the conscious use of reasoning; immediate apprehension or understanding; the ability to perceive or know things without conscious reasoning. In otherwords, there is a force within all of us that can logically deduce, analyze and reason out things before we are conscious of the outcome.

Through use of our intuition we empower ourselves tremendously. Through proper use of our intuition we decrease our suffering and struggle.

Remember, however, that intuition is a self-empowering gift from our Creator, and you can go through life and let lay the gifts the universe has given you...You do have the power of choice, (another self-empowering gift). For in another article.)

Now, we all know how much Mrs. Marjorie Holland likes to play bridge. The Labor Day weekend presented no exception. One of the days of the long weekend, Marjorie attended a cookout at Musette Middlebrooke's. This enjoyable day ended with a good game of bridge being played by Marjorie, Musette, Jean Brown and Lillian Mann.

Marjorie wasn't finished playing yet. The next day, she invited Dr. Alberta Turner, Mrs. Lena Johnson and Mrs. Stanley Webster (Juanita) for lunch and to shuffle, deal and turn card tricks for her favorite card game, bridge.

Mrs. James Smith (Ann) spent a part of her weekend making one of those "melt in your mouth" cheesecakes to take to a cook-out with friends. Her cheesecake is rated in my book among the top five made by friends in this city. Ann is one talented lady! She cooks superbly, calligraphies and can create decorations for educational and social events that are noteworthy...and she does it all in her quiet unassuming way.

Do you recall in a column a few weeks ago that I quoted words from a song having to do with the days dwindling down to a precious few, etc.? In that column, I said that I couldn't remember the title of the song.

Well, I've always said that when you don't something, ask. When you ask, there's bound to be someone who can give you not just any old answer, but the correct answer to your question. My quest for the title of that song was answered by several readers.

There was one person, in particular, I thoroughly enjoyed meeting over the phone during the holiday because of her obvious pleasantness. She is Willia Jackson.

Where Doug Learned To Lead

"There was a common bond," says Lt. Governor Lawrence Douglas Wilder of Virginia, speaking of his college experience. "We all knew who we were and where we needed to go, and what we needed to do to get there." Wilder, the nation's highest-ranking Black elected state official, attributes that world-beating attitude to the inspiring role models he found at Virginia Union University, one of America's Black colleges.

In an atmosphere of high intellectual quality, young Douglas Wilder discovered what he calls, "the high possibility of the individual." And following in a tradition that has produced outstanding scholars, professionals and public servants, he went on to a brilliant career as an attorney, state senator and civic activist. Is it any wonder that, though they enroll only 20% of Black college students, Black colleges produce 40% of Black college graduates?

When you're considering colleges, doesn't it make sense to consider the ones that educated achievers like Lawrence Douglas Wilder? Attending one could lead to a great future.

Teenagers can overcome drug, alcohol addiction

The teen years are tough years. Children making the transition to young adulthood are dealing with peer pressure, learning about dating, and struggling for independence from Mom and Dad.

Teens who long to be adult imitate the behavior of the adults around them. Some teens, feeling these and other pressures, begin to experiment with new behaviors, including alcohol and drugs. Shy adolescents learn that they are less inhibited, feel more outgoing and popular when they drink or get high. Teens whose school or family lives include emotional pain learn to anesthetize themselves from the experiences of life.

Studies show that at least 10% of people who drink will become alcoholics. For users of crack cocaine, the figures are staggering—nine out of ten will become addicted to the drug.

The Drug Free Schools Consortium of the Franklin County Educational Council recently found that 11% of Columbus sixth and seventh graders drink at least once a month. So do 19% of the eighth graders, and 31% of the freshmen and sophomores.

While many of these young people are not seriously affected by their drug and alcohol experiments, others have begun to experience the effects of chemical dependency which will haunt the rest of their lives. Those who become addicted often seriously retard their social and emotional development. The American Medical Association calls chemical dependency a primary, progressive, incurable disease that can lead to disability and death unless it is arrested.

Maryhaven's program work to empower teens to take responsibility for their own behavior and problems and by doing so, to overcome them. Teenagers spend up to five weeks in Maryhaven's low-cost residential program learning about the disease of chemical dependency and what is required to arrest the disease. The cost per day at Maryhaven is less than half what most other residential programs in Central Ohio charge, and treatment is covered by most insurance plans.

The lives of these teens and their families are disrupted and in turmoil because of their chemical abuse. Family involvement is critical to the recovery of the teens, and the adolescent program at Maryhaven offers families the support groups they need to begin healing and get back on an even keel. Maryhaven even has an educational program for foster parents of those teenagers who cannot find the encouragement they need in their own dysfunctional families.

Alcoholism and addiction can get worse; they can also get better. Maryhaven offers the hope of a better life to these teens and thousands of other Ohioans every year. For further information call Maryhaven at 445-8131.

FACT ABOUT CHEMICAL DEPENDENCY

•Alcoholism (including drug addiction) is primary, progressive, fatal, and incurable disease. It can, however, be arrested with proper intervention.

•An estimated 22 million Americans, or about 10% of the population, suffer from the disease of alcoholism. This conservative figure is based on deaths from cirrhosis of the liver. Today, many people recover from the disease well before cirrhosis develops.

•Nine out of ten people who use crack cocaine will become addicted to it.

•At least one in three people are affected by the disease of chemical dependency. The parents, children, siblings, friends, or co-workers are afflicted with the disease.

•Most people with alcoholism or drug addiction can be helped. Intervention includes: inpatient or outpatient treatment, Alcoholics Anonymous, Cocaine Anonymous, and Narcotics Anonymous.

•Professionals specifically trained to treat the disease of alcoholism and drug addiction are Certified Alcoholism Counselors, Certified Drug Counselors, or Certified Chemical Dependency Counselors.

•Young people who experiment with drugs and alcohol will typically become addicted more quickly than adults.

•Most people who are chemically dependent are not homeless. They often maintain their families, jobs, home and possessions while suffering from the disease.

•The cost of treatment at Maryhaven is about half the cost at other area treatment programs. Maryhaven provides detoxification, residential treatment for adults and adolescents, a program for persons convicted of driving under the influence, and a halfway house for women alcoholics.

Conference set for a drug-free Ohio

BOWLING GREEN, O.—A conference designed to educate and mobilize community leaders in the war against drug abuse will be held Thursday, Sept. 21, at the Radisson North Hotel in Columbus.

The session is the second of four regional conferences in the Drug Free Ohio program, a federally-funded effort to combine resources and develop community-wide strategies to more effectively prevent adolescent chemical use and abuse.

Dr. Molly Laflin, an associate professor of health education at Bowling Green State University, obtained a $194,000 federal grant to establish and implement Drug Free Ohio.

The regional conferences are designed to bring together a broad range of community leaders, including judicial officials, law enforcement officials, business leaders, parent groups, community and youth leaders, clergy, the medical community, teachers and guidance counselors, and to motivate them to join together to fight alcohol and other drug abuse.

"Drug abuse has been, and continues to be, a vital issue in our society, and each of these people, or groups of people, already may be involved in some kind of program to fight drug abuse," Laflin said. "Our purpose is to bring all of those people together and show them how to develop a coordinated plan of action for their respective communities."

The keynote speaker for the Columbus program is David Williams, an Ohio Certified Prevention Consultant. Williams is known throughout the United States for his humorous and engaging style in portraying how individuals can promote and participate in a healthy, drug free lifestyle.

ROBIN WILLIAMS
...scholarship recipient

Robin Williams off to Howard

Robin Williams, daughter of Robert and Lucretia Williams, received a volleyball scholarship from Howard University. She is a 1989 Bishop Hartley graduate.

According to her mother, she was also offered an academic scholarship from Grambling University in Louisiana.

Mrs. Williams also said Robin received honorable mention from the 1988 Ohio Catholic League and made the Second Class AA All-District Team. She participated in volleyball, basketball, and track while remaining on the honor roll.

She is currently at Howard University preparing for her first volleyball match at the naval academy in Annapolis, Md.

WILLIAMS, Dorothy A. Kelso, Sept. 3, 1989. Celebration of Life Service held Thursday, Sept. 7, Higher Ground Church, Dr. Sherman S. Watkins conducted. Active member of Altar Guild at St. Philip's Episcopal Church. Past Secretary of V.F.W. Post No. 3764, Past Secretary of American Legion Auxiliary No. 690. Employee of Huntington National Bank since 1949. Preceded in death by parents, John and Mary Kelso. Survived by sisters, Henrietta Kelso, Rosa Lee Wade; brothers, Robert, John, Edward, Raymond and James Kelso. 40 nieces and nephews; 42 great-nieces and nephews; 10 great-great-nieces; and other relatives.

The day-long conference will also feature workshops on specific drug-related issues. Participants will be able to select and attend four of the possible nine workshops offered throughout the day.

Workshop topics include Ideas for Parents' Groups, What Can Religious Organizations Do?, Youth at Risk—The Role of Juvenile Court, The Chemically Dependent Family and Developing School Education, Prevention and Intervention Programs.

"Participants will no doubt select at least one workshop which deals with their particular constituency, but we want them to learn to see the problem from other perspectives as well," Laflin said. "We want this conference to offer the opportunity to learn more about the drug abuse problem and, most importantly, discover ways to work with other members of their community to make a difference."

The conference registration fee of $40 covers lunch and other refreshments, as well as numerous take-home materials that will be available.

The Columbus conference is designed primarily to serve interested residents of Ohio counties in the central and east-central portions of the state. The first Drug Free Ohio conference was held last fall in Toledo. Similar conferences will be held in Cincinnati in November and in Akron in February.

Persons interested in attending the Columbus conference are encouraged to call or write Steve Powers, program coordinator for Drug Free Ohio, at 481 Forest St., Mansfield, phone (419) 524-8223.

SAVE MILLIONS OF DOLLARS DOWN THE ROAD.

When Central Ohioans invest in public transit, millions of dollars can be saved over the next few years.¹ And that's something you might think about the next time you hear someone say that our bus system is paid for by all of us, but only serves a few people. Here's how it works.

For starters, thousands of Franklin County residents take the bus to work every day because they have no other way to get there. That's about 44 percent of current riders. If there were no transit system, it would impose a hardship on those riders, and in fact, would impact our economic system in three major ways.

First, the loss of wages and reduced spending impact would mean the loss of tens of millions of dollars in tax revenues and higher unemployment compensation costs. It would also mean millions in lost sales to private business.

Second, the loss of the transit system would put up to 16,000 more cars on our streets and roads every rush hour. This would mean additional costs for the wear and tear on those streets and roads, plus the cost of more accidents caused by those 16,000 more cars.

Third, 16,000 additional cars would increase gas consumption, produce more exhaust fumes and raise the costs of fighting environmental pollution.

AND WHAT ABOUT THE LOSS OF FUTURE REVENUE?

But there's more at stake. The figures take into account the present state of the Central Ohio economy. They don't take into consideration the impact the lack of public transportation would have on our future economic growth. Public transportation is so important to the developers of the Columbus City Center that they are financing extended weekday evening and Saturday transit service, so that their employees, and shoppers as well, have transportation to and from their destinations.

Furthermore, business leaders agree that the availability of convenient, efficient public transit is a critical factor in deciding where to locate new and expanded facilities.

If Columbus had no public transit system, we could lose thousands of new jobs and the revenues those jobs would create.

PUBLIC TRANSIT IS A COMMUNITY TRUST

No major public transit system in the United States operates on fares alone. Transit systems are public services. And like other services, such as sanitation, police, fire, library and park services, they add to the quality of life. It's unrealistic to expect these services to operate at a profit.

It's a fact that even though public transit systems require support, the economic loss caused by not having public transit is far greater. In other words, COTA's buses don't represent public dollars flowing out of the treasury. What they represent is a healthy, growing economy producing tax revenues for the necessary services government provides to all of us. Millions of dollars. That's profit, not loss, for a community.

Black Caucus honors Congressman Leland

WASHINGTON, DC—A special tribute for late crusading Congressman Mickey Leland (D-TX) and awards to Reps. Augustus Hawkins (D-CA), William Gray (D-PA) and Democratic National Committee Chairman Ron Brown highlight the 19th annual Congressional Black Caucus Foundation Legislative Weekend here, Sept. 13-17. Top awards were also listed for Planned Parenthood president Faye Wattleton and Georgetown University Basketball Coach John Thompson.

The crisis facing poor children and underprivileged youth throughout the world was also set to be explored during the four-day series of public forums and legislative workshops in the halls of Congress and major hotels throughout the nation's capital. Scheduled participants ranged from representatives of some 200 organizations to speakers such as Martin L. King III "Youth Motivator" Tyrone Crider, movie star, Lou Gossett Jr., basketball star, Magic Johnson and jazz great, Dizzy Gillespie.

Less than a month after the fatal pilgrimages of Leland and 16 colleagues on a mercy mission to Ethiopia to aid African famine refugees, over 15,000 African-American leaders flocked to Washington to discuss drug abuse, teen pregnancy, unemployment, illiteracy, health care, athletics, the Black Elderly, Black Families, Black Male Survival, rural economic development, urban destruction, Black Reparations, Black Artists and jazz.

Dr. Johnnetta B. Cole, president of Spelman College in Atlanta is the keynote speaker with Rep. Julian C. Dixon (D-CA), CBC Chairman and Kweisi Mfume (D-Baltimore) served as weekend chairman. Between the scores of workshops and forums, sessions also included luncheons, receptions, fashion shows and private parties. The theme is "A Global Crisis: Our Children At Risk."

The legislative weekend program begins with a "Youth Seminar on Leadership in the Year 2000," featuring children of former civil rights leaders. The session coordinated by Rep. Walter E. Fauntroy (D-DC) listed Atillah Shabazz (daughter of Malcolm X), Mpho Tut, Amy Carter, Marc Morial, Susan Robeson, Thurgood Marshall Jr., Cheryl Sutton, Jesse Jackson Jr., Pam Gregory, Linda Chavez Rodriguez, Rep. Joseph Kennedy II and King.

Dr. Louis Sullivan, secretary of Health and Human Services, delivers a major address during the conference and the renowned Rev. James Forbes of New York's Riverside Baptist Church was scheduled to appear with the acclaimed Richard Smallwood Singers, recently returned from a Soviet Union tour, at the annual CBC Prayer Breakfast. New National Drug "Czar" William Bennett is expected to discuss "Drug Control" on a panel with Jesse Jackson, Dick Gregory and Rep. Charles Rangel (D-NY), chairman of the House Select Committee on Narcotics and ranking CBC member.

In addition to coordinating the events annual jazz forum, Rep. John Conyers (D-MI) moderates a panel on "Black Reparations—An Emerging Public and Legislative Policy." In announcing the weekend schedule, the CBC members proudly noted that on August 2, the House of Representatives passed H.R. 2990, a $155 million 1990 appropriations bill for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services and Education. "Programs that serve the poor, the elderly and children were protected from cuts and, in most cases, received increases," Rep. Louis Stokes (D-Cleveland) announced. The House has also passed a much debated child care bill providing funds for low income families, but all these measures must be passed by the U.S. Senate before they become law in 1990.

The Congressional Black Caucus was established in 1971 as a political unit in the House of Representatives with only six members. It now has 23 members. The CBC Foundation was established in 1976 as a nonprofit, tax exempt, educational, research and fund-raising organization dedicated to increasing the political awareness of Black (African) Americans.

Comin' home celebration revisited

By J.M. Smith
Call and Post Staff Writer

From our mail bag...

Dear Ms. Smith:

I write to commend you on your editorial of August 3, 1989 which referenced the "Coming Home" celebration held in the Mt. Vernon Avenue area.

I am in total agreement with your statement that all money is not good money. When Blacks are continually placed in a position to be financially consumed by whites it becomes disheartening. And now we must contend with an infiltration of foreigners attempting to stymie our growth efforts.

Should whites/foreigners continue to sell their goods at this major event, the capital generated certainly will not remain in the neighborhood where it belongs. We must unite in an effort to keep the financial flow in our own hands. The community has already been physically split by the construction of the north expressway and now I-670 has created another division. I pose the question, "How has Bexley managed to remain untouched?"

I must applaud you for addressing a sensitive issue and want to share with you that your position in this matter of great importance mirrors my own.

Sincerely,
Albert Pannell

Dear Mr. Pannell:

It isn't easy being an outspoken woman; and one of color, at that. Yet, because of the many calls and letters such as yours, it makes the battle worth the while. Furthermore, where would we (people of color) be today if it weren't for courageous, expressive Black women?

I understand that our people are napping right now; I further believe that as long as we continue to give food for thought, sooner or later the food will be digested and used advantageously.

It's an educational process, and I'm grateful to have had the opportunity to share it. Thanks, Mr. Pannell for the letter of encouragement.

Regards,
J.M. Smith

RICH, VIABLE AND STILL FIGHTING FOR RESPECT

Several months ago, the National Association of Market Developers (NAMD) held their 36th annual conference in New Orleans, La. This year's theme, "African-Americans: The $300 Billion Market" was very timely indeed.

With NAMD members from giant corporations such as Philip Morris USA, Coca-Cola, Coors Brewing, Hallmark, Pepsi-Cola, Batus, Inc. (Marshall Field's), CBS Records to name a few, it's no wonder that these professionals have taken the lead in helping corporate America to understand that the African-American market is an important, valuable segment of the overall market.

That's one of the reasons NAMD was formed; to be a network for professionals in marketing, sales, advertising, public relations and urban affairs as it relates to the minority consumer.

However, these professionals can not do it alone. We must unify to get the job done, by taking a stand to let major corporations know that our hard earned dollars can no longer be taken for granted. It's time for them (corporations) to give back to our communities.

Chuck Morrison, vice president of Black/Hispanic Marketing, Coca-Cola USA, and president of NAMD, was right on the mark when he stated, "We are a $300 billion market and still fighting for respect. We are heavy consumers, brand loyal, and easy to reach. Yet with all that going for us, we are the most ignored, taken for granted, misunderstood, abused group of consumers you can find."

Why? Because we have gotten too complacent. We have not challenged the people we do business with, on their hiring practices; nor have we challenged them on how much business they do with minority companies; or even if they use Black media to get their message across.

Why should we accept mediocrity from corporate America? The time has come for them to be held accountable for their actions. And a good start is right in growing, dynamic Columbus, Ohio, with the Columbus City Center mall. After all your tax dollars and mine were used to build the place.

"...still fighting for respect"

Here's some food for thought: How many African-American managers are in position at the City Center Mall? How many African-American suppliers have they used? Suppliers such as: Public Relations, Special Events firms, Printers, etc., and what companies in the mall are advertising with the Call and Post or can be heard from Black-oriented radio? These are but a few things for us to be cognizant of, but more important, there is something we can do as consumers.

ANNOUNCING THE HUNTINGTON NO PENALTY, EXTENDED RATE CERTIFICATE OF DEPOSIT.

Just once, wouldn't you like to hear a bank talk about Certificates of Deposit without uttering this disclaimer: "Substantial penalty for early withdrawal"?

With the new Huntington No Penalty, Extended Rate Certificate, we won't say a word about a penalty for early withdrawal—because during the first seven-month term, there isn't one.

So, if interest rates go up and you'd like to reinvest at a higher rate, or you just want your money back, you can withdraw part or all of your funds with no penalty.

You can invest from $2,500 to $100,000, and your funds are insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, an agency of the Federal Government. What's more, your interest is compounded daily to maximize your earnings.

Plus one guaranteed renewal at your original rate.

Let's say, seven months from now, interest rates go down. You can choose to let your Certificate of Deposit automatically renew at your original, higher rate. That way, you've extended today's higher rate from seven months to fourteen months. But if rates rise, you can choose to let your Certificate of Deposit automatically renew at the higher rate. So whether interest rates rise or fall in seven months, you're a guaranteed winner.

Still another plus is that your No Penalty, Extended Rate Certificate automatically qualifies you for Huntington Interest Checking with no monthly service charge. The higher your Interest Checking balance, the more interest you'll earn. And, you can write as many checks as you want.

If a Huntington No Penalty, Extended Rate Certificate sounds like the kind of investment you'd like to make, talk to your Personal Banker. Or call 1-800-533-5225 today, and take the risk out of the interest rate game.
